

CONSTRUCTIVE LEGISLATION

"What Important Piece of Constructive Legislation has Senator Page Introduced and Pushed to a Successful Issue?"

Conceding for the moment that this question is one which Senator Page should answer—as it surely is if asked in good faith—two questions present themselves:

First, is the Vocational Education Bill, a very important piece of constructive legislation?

Second, is Senator Page responsible therefor?

Taking up the first question, Senator Page's answer would be: "Vocational Education is one of the most important pieces of constructive legislation now engaging public attention."

Why? "Because it opens up a broad educational policy which vitally and favorably affects every state, county, town, and school district in the United States, and because it is a measure designed to give efficiency to every American boy and girl, not only in the workshop and on the farm, but in the home, and it is a measure which is designed to make into better citizens the boys and girls of today, who will constitute the citizenship of tomorrow."

On this question President Wilson speaks, in the clean-cut language for which he is justly celebrated, as follows:

There are two sides to the question of preparation. There is not merely a military side—there is an industrial side. And the ideal which I have in mind is this, gentlemen: We ought to have in this country a great system of industrial and vocational education, under Federal guidance and with Federal aid, in which a very large percentage of the youth of this country will be given training in the skillful use and application of the principles of science in manufacture and business.

Congressman James R. Mann, everywhere recognized as the great Republican leader of the present House of Representatives, and the man who will, should the administration change, unquestionably be the next Speaker of the House says:

The subject of vocational education I think is one of the most important subjects before the American people today, or, for that matter, before the people of the world, but particularly with us. We are going to be in competition with other nations when they do better than we, by instructing their youth in the vocations.

Answering the second question, "Is Senator Page responsible for this legislation?" the following fact is given as a matter of official record:

In 1911 the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry passed, without a dissenting vote, the following resolution:

Resolved, that Senator Page, as a subcommittee of one, be instructed to correspond with leading educators and others interested in the purposes of the proposed measure, and to report to the full committee the result of his investigation, and to submit a bill amended to conform to the suggestions he may receive from such correspondence or any he might have to make.

Acting in conformity with this resolution, Senator Page entered into a correspondence with the leading educators of this country, which became so extensive that the Senator was compelled to devote thereto the larger part of his vacation period in the fall of 1911, and from that time until the present, in season and out of season, night and day, the surplus energies of Senator Page have been largely given to this work. To him it has been a labor of love, and he has incurred expenditures with reference to this measure out of his private means, not reimbursable by Congress, of more than $2,000.

That this great measure is regarded by the National Senate as the child of Senator Page is a matter of general knowledge, but as bearing upon this point, we quote below from speeches delivered in the United States Senate July 31, 1916.

Senator Smith, of Georgia, in discussing the measure, said:

The responsibility for this measure would have continued with Senator Page rather than to have fallen to me, but for the change which took place in the organization of the Senate three years ago. With a Republican majority he was leading in the work and I was helping him. Since that time, as I am Chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, the situation is reversed just a little, but I am always glad to stop at any time the opportunity is presented to give to the Senator from Vermont every possible credit for his splendid work upon this subject, and almost regret that we have a Democratic majority and that he hasn't charge of the bill instead of myself.

Senator Maritime, of New Jersey, speaking on the same day in the Senate, said:

In New York on two occasions quite recently I dropped into an institution maintained for the purpose of encouraging vocational education. They expressed themselves in most high favor of the process of education that was anticipated in the Vocational Education Bill then known as the Page Bill. Since then there has been a merging of ideas and interests between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Vermont. But these gentlemen, the principals of these schools, couldn't speak highly enough or extravagantly enough of the great advantages that would come from the adoption of this vocational education scheme which was known as the Page-Smith bill. It will prove a blessing to the generations coming on and in the future this will be of untold value to our Republic.

Senator Thomas, of Colorado, speaking on the same day in the Senate, said:

If I had any doubt about this amendment I would certainly dismiss it upon the assurance of the Senator from Vermont, whose child this bill unquestionably is, and who, as declared by the Senator from Georgia, is entitled to the great merit of having framed it, introduced it, lived with it and brought it to its present moment of fruition. It is a great work, and a monument to the Senator's career, which I am sure will keep his memory fresh and green in the hearts of a grateful posterity.

There are other important pieces of constructive legislation standing to the credit of Senator Page.

On July 24, 1916, Senator Page addressed the Senate upon this great educational measure. On July 31st the bill was passed by the Senate, and yet during the time that this bill was under consideration and being placed upon its passage, a hundred columns, more or less, of paid advertising and many thousands of circulars were being sent broadcast through the state of Vermont criticizing Senator Page for addressing the Senate, and declaring that there was no necessity for his speech because the bill was not before the Senate, and would not be acted upon at this session, concluding with the query: "Why then a speech on the bill by Senator Page at this time for any other reason than for distribution to the voters of Vermont for campaign purposes?"

The ignorance of the writer or his willful purpose to deceive must be apparent. Senator Page delivered his address upon one of the greatest pieces of constructive legislation before the country, in the formulation of which he has given many months of his earnest labor and best judgment, and seven days later the bill was passed by the Senate with the open declaration of Senators, including Chairman Hoke Smith himself, that Senator Page was the leader in this great measure.

Could anything have been done with a more deliberate purpose to deceive the voters of Vermont?
